for Its Bourbon Whiskey. Kentucky is famous for whiskey and snake tories not that there is any affinity between them, although a drink of Blue Grass bourbon or borders of velvet, headed by tinsel braids, or fancy ribbons of silk and thosel, are very fashionable on woollen costumes. Silk biouses of simple make are trimmed in this fashion: The border of velvet, cut on the cross, and about one and a half to two inches wide, with a flat ribbon, half tinsel and half silk, heading the band of velvet. A beit, collar and cuffs of this make any blouse smart and effective.

Charming French batiste gowns in cream, honeysuckle yellow, English pink or ciel biue are trimmed with ecru embroideries, pretty white cotton galloons, fine wide linen laces of depth enough to form Zouave fronts and Venetian collars. For country houses, tennis fetes, the casino, &c., there is a return to the beautifully embroidered muslins with openwork patterns inserted, or rich appliques of guior borders of velvet, headed by tinsel braids, which met in Kentucky last Fall, to a re-
